Severe weather causes jolt of power outages for 6,000 Manhattan residents

GEORGE WALKER | THE COLLEGIAN

Lightning fills the sky west of Manhattan during the lastest bout of thunderstorms and severe weather on Sunday night.

By Shelton Burch THE COLLEGIAN

Thunderstorms impacted parts of northeast and central Kansas on Sunday night, delivering rainfall and power outages to Manhattan and the surrounding areas.

We had approximately 6,000 customers (in the Manhattan area) that lost power as a result of last night's storm," said Gina Penzig, Westar Energy's director of corporate comoutages and a handful of smaller outages Sunday. The first large outage began at approximately 8:30 p.m. and affected about 2,000 customers. The second occurred at approximately 10 p.m. and affected approximately 2,600 customers.

Penzig said most of the outages, including the two more significant ones, lasted about an hour before crews were able to restore power. However, a few of the smaller outages lasted 2-3 hours in some cases, she said.

Severe thunderstorm watches and warnings were issued for northeast and east central A severe thunderstorm watch w expired at 10:34 p.m. said Shawn Byrne of the Topeka, Kansas National Weather Service

The storm provided 1.27 inches of rain to Manhattan at Manhattan Regional Airport, Byrne said. The storm came from a cold front in Nebraska that pushed into Kansas, and created a line of storms from Wichita up to the Kansas City metro area.

As of Monday evening, most of the power in Manhattan area had been restored, Pen-

Representatives for Mercy Regional Penzig said there were two large scale effect for Manhattan starting at 5:34 p.m. and were not available for comment Monday.

State, national gas prices in flux in light of world conflicts

By Connor Lamm THE COLLEGIAN

As students have made the drive back to school, and the summer has come to a conclusion, the average price per gallon of gasoline in Kansas seems to be rising. GasBuddy.com, a website that allows users to search gasoline prices at 140,000 pumps in North America, states that the national average gas price is now at $3.43 per gallon; Kansas average price is $3.26 per gallon. Although prices have dropped by roughly two cents in the last week, the state's fuel supply continues to become increasing expensive in the long term.

Just like most other issues involving the economy, the recent escalation of gas prices cannot be attributed to just one factor. According to cbsnews.com and AAA, 46 out of the 50 states have seen an increase in prices due to lower gas inventories.

According to cbsnews.com, one contributing factor to the increase in gas prices is related to the Ukraine-Russia conflict. This conflict has the power to make oil shipments from Russia to West Europe difficult, which in turn can alter gas prices globally.

The escalating gas prices can also be attributed to the seizure of Mosul, Iraq by militants; actions in the Middle East can affect prices in the United States. The majority of the oil the United States acquires does not come from Iraq. However, the uncertain futures of the hostilities in Iraq were a possible cause for driving prices up. United States citizens are another reason prices have gone up throughout the country. According to useconomy.about.com, an excessive amount of driving uses large amounts of ethanol, which raises gas prices in the summer by an average of ten cents.

"The high price of gas makes it difficult for me to be able to drive home and spend as much time with family as I would like," said Kadin Zimmerman, junior in computer engineering.

The good thing is there are always options. Obviously, the best way to save is to not drive as much. However, for some people driving is a necessity. One of the biggest ways to conserve fuel is to make sure the car's tires are inflated at the proper levels. This and many other suggestions for fuel conservation are located at useconomy.about.com.

Many experts and sources claim that the prices should go down around Labor Day and continue to decrease into the winter as the shift is made to winter-based gas, and the production is cheaper than summer-based. Even though it may seem unbearable and costly at the moment, a price decrease could be just around the corner.

Commission to consider MHK airport terminal expansion plans

Airport 'Terminal Expansion Project' goes before city commission for approval

The Manhattan City Commission is schedule to vote on a $6.68 Million contract to expand the passenger terminal at Manhattan Regional Airport as part of the second phase of construction, according to Tuesday's agenda.

Also on the agenda is the vote to allow City Administration to purchase furniture, fixtures and equipment for phases one and two of the project, in the amount of $299,471. The City Commission meeting is scheduled to take place at 7:00 p.m. at city hall, and is open to the public.

KCI terminal evacuated, reopened after bomb threat

Terminal B of Kansas City International Airport was temporarily closed Sunday after a man approached an airport employee and said there was a bomb in a car parked along a curb in front of the

According to a KSHB-TV article, the man was taken into custody on the scene, and the terminal evacuated, causing one flight to be cancelled and multiple others to be delayed. The bomb ended up being a hoax, and the terminal was reopened at 8:30 p.m. Sunday night.

Rams release Michael Sam

Michael Sam, who in May became the first openly gay player to be drafted into the NFL, was cut Saturday as the St. Louis Rams announced their final 53-man roster before the start of the NFL regular season, according to a CNN article published Sunday.

Sam, a former All-American defensive end at the University of Missouri, was drafted in the final round of this year's draft. He is now allowed to seek employment with other NFL teams, either on their game rosters or on their practice squads.

Israel claims 990 acres of land

Israel announced Sunday its intentions to make approximately 990 acres in land around the Wadi Fukin valley near Bethlehem into "state land," according to a CNN article published on Monday.

The land is part of what is considered Palestinian territory in the West Bank, according to the article. The area is equivalent to a little over 1.5 square miles. If Israel succeeds, the new area will be available for industrial development and settlement by Israeli citizens. According to the article, farmers have 45 days to ap-

From the President's desk: welcome back students

Dear Fellow K-Staters,

Welcome back to campus and congratulations on making it through the first week of school. How about them Wildcats? Our football team had a great showing Saturday night against the Lumberjacks of Stephen F. Austin. Our Volleycats also had a good Saturday as they beat South Dakota 3-0. I am looking forward to watching both these teams have a successful season this year.

As I hope you already know, our K-State Student Union is going to get a $25 million dollar facelift over the next couple of years. We hope to start the construction next summer in order to have the renovation completed by the fall of 2016. On Thursday, from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., we will be interviewing five prospective architecture firms to do the final design for our union. We would encourage any student that wants to attend to come to Union 207 for these interviews

Every full-time student at Kansas State University, this semester, has paid $405 in privilege fees. Therefore, Cody and I would like to encourage you to get the most out of your fee dollars. Get some extra help in your classes by getting a tutor or going to a walk-in tutoring session. Go pump some iron in our newly renovated Chester E. Peter's Recreation Complex. Enjoy some free or discounted entertainment options through the Union Program Council. These are just a few ways to make the most of your privilege fee dollars.

Due to a recent iSIS outage we encourage students to verify the accuracy of your information in iSIS, especially if you made a change in the system between July 10 and July 15. See the students and parents webpage for suggestions on what to do. You may also want to visit the iSIS recovery webpage for details of the outage and recovery efforts. If you are having any troubles with financial aid showing up on iSIS, contact the Office of Student Financial Assistance at 785-532-6420 or finaid@k-state.

If you ever need anything or have questions, feel free to contact Cody and I and we will do our best to help you in any way we can.

Timely city road repairs should be higher budgetary priority

By Bridget Beran THE COLLEGIAN

There's a saying in parts of the country that there are four seasons: fall, winter, spring and road construction. It's clear in Manhattan that one of those is here to stay. While it may feel like the roads surrounding Kansas State University are always being improved, for many students it seems like a never-ending battle against the potholes.

While I may not hail from Manhattan, as a college student, it's where I primarily live. Maybe my home county spoiled me because our roads are in excellent condition. Moving to Manhattan, I remember being appalled at the state of city streets.

Manhattan roads stand as a concern for K-State students and city residents alike. Following the past winter, which saw more moisture and freezing temperatures than the past three winters according to city records, the roads were anticipated by city officials to be even worse than normal.

During last spring's Public Works update at the April 29 city commission meeting, Robert Ott, director of Public Works, informed the city commissioners that it would take more than $3.3 million to bring Manhattan's streets up to par. That number is disconcerting considering the city only budgeted $1.1 million for road repair and maintenance.

With the rate of expansion in Manhattan, it's unreasonable for city officials to not adjust the budget accordingly to account for the much needed road repairs and improvements

Manhattan's Public Works website allows residents to report a pothole in their area, but there's no guarantee that the issue will be resolved in a timely fashion. For example, the intersection of Denison Avenue and Claffin Road, which marks a major corner of campus, is riddled with potholes.

Potholes aren't just annoying. They can also be dangerous to vehicles. According to the Firestone Tires' website, potholes can cause tire punctures, wheel rim damage, premature wear on shocks and struts, suspension damage, steering system misalignment, exhaust system and engine damage. I know as a college student, I don't have the time or money to take care of costly repairs to my vehicle. "I hate how every time I drive I have a fear that my tires are going to bend or I'm going to lose my bumper or hurt my car," Allison

Dorr, senior in hospitality management said.

City officials are faced with the task of figuring out how to repair these problematic potholes without breaking the bank - a job I don't envy. In some places, a quick pothole patch may only cost around $9, according to Tulsa, Oklahoma's city services webpage. However, that variety of repair is far from permanent and will need attention again very soon. Determining which roads take priority can also be frustrating. Don't live on a major road or somewhere traveled for businesses? Forget about it. The road I live on.

which is incredibly close to campus, was finally renovated after progressively developing so many potholes that it was virtually unusable in recent years.

Jason Hilgers, deputy city manager, stated during the April 29 City Commission meeting that while they strive to repair all the roads, sometimes they have to pick and choose where they can afford to do repairs due to limited budget. Residential areas are often put on the back burner.

Unfortunately, this problem isn't restricted to Manhattan. All across the country, roads are under-maintained and wreaking havoc on drivers and their vehicles.

AAA estimated in February that drivers across the nation would spend almost $6.4 million in car repairs in 2014 due to pothole damage. While I understand that there are other things to budget for, like education, it seems counter-productive to not maintain roads we spent billions of dollars building in the first place.

Owning pets during college years not worth investment, added responsibilities

At home, the lower half of my bed is somehow occupied entirely by a 12-pound miniature poodle. At my house in Manhattan, the most lively animal interactions I have are killing crickets in our living room. It's quiet and dark when I come home from work, and when I'm working on homework, there's no little animal with which to take a fetch break. But no matter how much I miss my dog at home, I can't bring myself to get a pet while still enrolled in college. My life has too many factors that may negatively affect an animal's life at the expense of some comfort in

Like students themselves, dogs are products of their environments and can be easily stressed by situations to which humans are accustomed. Parties or large amounts of people in a home can make a dog or cat feel unsafe. A test or group project of the owner may disrupt the routine of the dog. Consistent timetables are best for young puppies who are often just being house trained. Students have anything but consistent schedules and may harm the dog's learning, level of obedience or well-being.

According to a guide published by Petco, crate training may alleviate some stress on a dog. The crate becomes a safe place when other parts of life become overwhelming. The proper sized crate for each animal depends on their size and temperament, and may change over time.

In addition, apartment complexes are not always pet-friendly. If they do have a special rate for pets, most of them are monthly fees on top of a regular rent. At University Crossing, the pet rent is $30 a month after a $300 non-refundable pet fee at the beginning of the lease. Food, veterinary charges, accessories like leashes and toys and damages incurred to property make up another financial commitment that could burden a college student. Moving is another stressor for a dog, which is a big factor in a young adult's life.

The city of Manhattan places restrictions on pet ownership that younger residents, like college students, may not realize. Manhattan has a dangerous dogs ordinance, which means some breeds can be classified as needing special restrictions no matter the behavior of the animal. Pit bulls, Chow ment; scatters refuse that is bagged or otherwise contained; causes any condition which threatens or endangers the health or well-being of persons or other animals; or causes a disturbance by loud, frequent and habitual barking, howling, yelping, mewing or screeching.'

There are two shelters in Manhattan where volunteers can walk animals or volunteer in office positions in order to be close to the anmay curb some of the need to be around animals. Even visiting or taking care of a someone with a pet would surely appreciate the help. At the most desperate times, a walk around Petco or Petsmart will help curb those feelings. If I have a little extra cash, I pick up a little bone at the store and send it back home.

Being in contact with animals, but at a safe distance. allows me enough affection to feel better with fewer responsibilities than sole ownership.

Big 12 Power Rankings: Assessing the conference after opening weekend

1) No. 10 Baylor (1-0) Week 1: 45-0 win vs. SMU

The Bears pulled out the most convincing victory over an FBS program this past weekend. They steamrolled SMU on offense while debuting their brand new, $240 million McLane Stadium.

Bryce Petty, Baylor's Heisman-caliber quarterback, went 13 for 23 for 161 yards and threw two touchdown passes. The senior limped for a majority of the second quarter with two cracked vertebrates in his spine, but battling through the injury shows why Petty is in discussion for a trip to New York City in December.

The defense, an area that was of concern for the Bears. gave head coach Art Briles and staff little reason to worry moving forward. The Bears' defense allowed only 67 total yards, including a staggering -24 rushing yards.

2) No. 4 Oklahoma (1-0)

Week 1: 48-16 win vs. Louisiana Tech

Head coach Bob Stoops

and his Sooners gave little room for doubt against the Bulldogs. While sophomore quarterback Trevor Knight didn't have shocking numbers in his debut as OU's starting signal caller, Knight and the running back group torched the Louisiana Tech defense for 183 rushing yards and five rushing touchdowns, propelling the Sooners to the lopsided victory.

The question for the Sooners coming into the game was who was going to take over in the backfield for the departed duo of Brennan Clay and Damien Williams. However, freshman Samaje Perine and sophomore Keith Ford combined for 128 yards and three touchdowns.

3) Texas (1-0)

Week 1: 38-7 win vs. North Texas

Charlie Strong's debut in Austin could not have gone better. His defense struck fear in the eyes of the Mean Green. By the start of the fourth quarter, the Mean Green could only muster 34 yards. The defense forced four interceptions against Dan McCarney's squad from Denton, Texas. If it wasn't for junior quarterback David Ash fumbling the ball in the end zone, the Longhorns would have registered a shutout to start the season.

4) No. 20 K-State (1-0) Week 1: 55-16 vs. Stephen F. Austin

offensive attack chipped away against the Lumberjacks and shined with its rushing attack. With 240 rushing yards and 238 passing yards, the offense also maintained the balance that Snyder hoped for.

The defense, however, seemed to struggle at times, allowing several big plays to delayed runs and quarterback scrambles up the middle. If the Wildcat defense is to stop Iowa State on Saturday, the defense will have to step up to the plate and take away the big plays.

5) Oklahoma State (0-1) Week 1: 37-31 loss vs.

No. 1 Florida State To the surprise of many,

the Cowboys nearly knocked off the reigning national champions and Heisman winner Jameis Winston in their season opener. A fumble with less then five minutes remaining killed any momentum that the Cowboys had and led to the loss. The defense showed that if it got teams to a third down, it could hold off most onslaughts, allowing the Seminoles to go four for 14 on third downs.

A loss puts a sour taste in any team's mouth, but taking it to the wire with the No. 1 team in the nation could lead to a renewed sense of confidence for the Cowboys for the rest of the season.

6) West Virginia (0-1) Week 1: 33-23 loss vs. No. 2 Alabama

The Mountaineers, who are coming off a 4-8 season, proved that they could compete against anyone as they almost knocked off an extremely talented Alabama team.

The Mountaineers' senior quarterback Clint Trickett proved his accuracy as he had his way against the Tide, completing 29 of 45 passes for 365 yards and a touchdown. If it weren't for his receivers having issues reeling the passes in, Trickett would've impressed even more and would've had a shot to beat the Tide.

7) TCU (1-0) Week 1: 48-14 win vs.

Quarterback Trevone

Boykin had one of the best games of his career. The junior signal-caller threw for 320 yards and two touchdowns in just over a half of play. Boykin made the most of his playing opportunity after being re-named the starter for the 2013-14 season.

That being said, Samford isn't remotely close to the competition of the Crimson Tide or Seminoles. The Horned Frogs still have plenty to prove before being moved up in the rankings.

8) Texas Tech (1-0)

Week 1: 42-35 win vs. Central Arkansas

While the Red Raiders were able to win their season opener, it was far from pretty. The Red Raiders defense allowed 506 total yards to an FCS opponent. Yikes.

9) Iowa State (0-1)

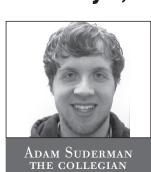

Week 1: 34-14 loss vs. North Dakota State

Being the only team in the conference to lose against an FCS school in the opening week, the Cyclones earned their spot at No. 9. Losing to the Bison wouldn't have been a horrible thing for the Cyclones but because the loss came in such lopsided fashion, it's hard to argue their Week 1 power rankings placement.

10) Kansas (0-0)

Week 1: bye, open vs. Southeast Missouri State on

Cowboys, Mountaineers prove doubters conference is deeper than expected

For the better part of the last eight months, conversation circled around who would compete with Baylor and Oklahoma for the Big 12 title. Many national pundits saw the other eight schools chasing these top 10 questions. TCU? Not enough offense. Texas and Texas Tech? Too many unknowns.

Kansas State? Defensive

While these programs fought for No. 3 through No. 6 in projected standings, Oklahoma State and West Virginia were pushed aside largely due to what appeared to be impossible season openers and inexperience.

Will these programs be in line for a Big 12 Championship at the end of November? No. But as someone who once saw these games as almost-guaranteed victories for Bill Snyder and company, I'll be more than happy to step to the front of the line to admit my mistake.

In terms of pure athleticism d competition, these two discounted programs have seen it in its truest form while playing against the Alabama Crimson Tide and the Florida State Seminoles

Whether it's the nearly superhuman ability of Jameis Winston to manage the Florida State offense or Nick Saban's prowess in coaching a football team, it's just about as good as it gets.

"It's frustrating because you play against a really good team and you are in position in the fourth quarter to be able to win the game and you don't have these opportunities very often," Dana Holgorsen, West Virginia head coach, said of his team's efforts after Saturday's loss. "We were in a very similar situation last year when we played Oklahoma in Norman, Oklahoma, and we were in that game, had a chance to win it and we didn't."

While Holgorsen made a valid reference to last season's 16-7 loss in Norman, a much more poised Clint Trickett in the pocket gives the Mountaineers a more efficient option at quarterback position than a year ago.

When discussing the conference's elite or better than average quarterbacks, Oklahoma State's J.W. Walsh and Trickett were far from the first names that came to mind. With Baylor's Bryce Petty, Oklahoma's Trevor Knight and K-State's Jake Waters manning the top three spots, the Cowboys' and Mountaineers' signal-callers got a swift kick to the sidelines.

How did Trickett fare against arguably the nation's best defense? A strong showing of 29 completions, 365 passing yards and a touchdown.

Credit goes to Holgorsen and Cowboys' head coach Mike Gundy for preparing their teams to face the top two ranked teams in the country. While Walsh didn't fair quite as well statistically, the Cowboys' starting quarterback was gutsy in his efforts against the defending national champions by rushing for two scores. Florida State head coach

Jimbo Fisher was complimentary of the Cowboys' efforts after the near monumental upset. "A lot of credit to Oklahoma they did a heck of a job. I told te," Fisher said. "I thought you Mike [Gundy] has a got a good football team, and he's a heck of a football coach. He has done a great job for a long time."

Overreacting over one week of games can be dangerous, but when performances of this caliber come against elite competition, it's an excellent indicator of what's ahead.

Baylor, who claimed last year's Big 12 championship title and is regarded as the conference favorite, will play at Texas on Oct. 4, at West Virginia on Oct. 18, at Oklahoma on Nov. 8 and will host Kansas State on Dec. 6.

After watching what the conference had to offer in its 2014-15 opening weekend, it's becoming increasingly difficult to predict the Big 12 order of finish.
